Thank you for the opportunity to review this article. First, I congratulate the author for the effort to address an important topic. The article could have been a good contribution to the research as soon as fundamental issues are considered and resolved.

- First, the previous literature is not considered in the introductory part. For example, how the Main e-learning challenges were identified?
- It is not clear why the case of China is selected.
- There is limited information in the Methods section. Some information of the Results should have been part of the Methods.
- There is no information on the anayles conducted.
- Only some results are presented, 2 out of questions.
- There is a little critical view on the topics examined.
