

Review of: "The Dual Role of Culture in Evolutionary Play: Anthropogenic Expansion Vss Destruction of Biodiversity"

Marcelo Cassini

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I would like to believe what this author says regarding the relationship of ancient communities with nature. It is pleasant to think that human beings once had a harmonious relationship with nature. That may have happened in some parts of the world, but the evidence indicates that this was not the most common pattern. I send the reference of a recent article only as an example of this evidence:

Prates, L., Perez, S.I. Late Pleistocene South American megafaunal extinctions associated with the rise of Fishtail points and human population. Nat Commun 12, 2175 (2021). <https://doi.org/10.1038/s41467-021-22506-4>