- before using the acronym MIF, please explain in a line that after this it will be used as MIF defining the complete name.
- The author has done a review paper and has written in introduction that it is an empirical research, which is not true, this needs correction
- Paper needs review for some typo errors and grammatical mistakes.
- definitions of microfinance round the globe are different then what are used in south Asia, especially India, author needs to define this a bit where he define the definitions of MIF in the beginning.
- a table of all literature reviewed with comparative texts would be more suitable for this paper to make sure all data is put in a matrix and available to compare in one look
- putting the literature under heads and comparing the author's work would be more fruitful and should be the essence of the paper
- the empirical research written should be defines just not mention that it shows... the details of the research should be included even in form of an appendix
- no empirical studies are mentioned as mentioned in objectives
- as the major objectives of all studies mentioned, can be separated as the headings of the literature, also a matrix to formulate research in a more synthesized manner
- conclusions should add in the limitations and scope of the research.
- a comparative analysis of all of the research is necessary, just listing them down more like annotated bibliography will not be the right mode of study.
