In the current form, sent to the undersigned by 22 December 2023, the present paper is pretty comprehensive (at the edge of publishable articles). The three authors (who are sort of newcomers to the community of authors of international papers) did, however, provide a publication with a lot of details and at a surprisingly high scientific level. The paper is written in pretty good academic English. One thing to change would be: The still overly often used term "interdisciplinary" has to be replaced by "transdisciplinary" (which is the correct term!). A second hint: The authors should read the publications issued by Sekela Twisa (Tanzania) as the first author and select usable aspects from these publications to be considered in the authors' publication. Once this has been accomplished, the reviewer considers the present article worth publication.
