The author attempted to answer the question why fewer people are opting for engineering education in India these days. The paper contains a few visuals and undoubtedly, a lot of work has been done to write it. We appreciate it very much.

The points I would work on if I were the author of this paper may include the following: 1) have a clearer structure of an academic paper we are used to; 2) describe methods used by the authors, including statistical methods that could help find undercover factors - like various types of factor analysis; 3) add 1-2 alternative perspectives - e.g. what could be some potential social/economic/political/technological/legislative effects and implications; 4) add research limitations; 5) ask someone who teaches academic English to foreign students to proofread the paper.
