The article presented is clear and well-written. The graphics are pertinent and denote a good way of describing the results of the applied methodology. I think that the ethnobotany of the region is well described, although a map is missing where the plants described can be located exactly. As for the use of the information by people other than researchers, it can be improved in that aspect. But in general, the paper describes the idea of preserving the ethnobotany of the country of origin. As an evaluator, I am satisfied with the manuscript, and therefore I give my approval for it to be published in this journal.
