The article summarizes the progress of Nigeria in addressing Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) using reports as input. Although it is interesting from the implementation point of view, I miss details in the methodology so it can be reproducible. Some challenges regarding SDG reporting are mentioned, but there are no practical or state-of-the-art methods to address those.

I don't understand how the reported data support the statement: "The key to Nigeria's efforts at addressing poverty is to recognize the centrality of women in producing healthy children."

Regarding small farmers, it can be suggested that they use a crop monitoring system based on satellite images.
