The article abstract does not describe the tools that were used to evaluate the models.

The article contains a lot of good quotes, but they are still very similar and do not reveal the essence. I would shorten the first introductory sections of the article as well as the introduction to the practical part.

The article covers an interesting and pressing topic of our time.

The authors spent a lot of time studying the issue they cover. The article's style is more like a book, but not like an article.

Typically, SCOPUS and WOS articles have a more concise content, which has a clear structure of sections: Introduction, Materials and Methods, Results, Discussion, and Conclusions.

For the future, I recommend that the authors of the article simplify the material or publish an excellent book.
