

Review of: "History as an Ethical Craft — A Study of Ethical Reasons in the Explanation of Historical Acts"

Rosemary Sage<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I was impressed with this paper as it tackled an issue of huge importance, especially now history is often an area where facts are skewed for political reasons today. The role of ethical and moral considerations is thus important. I agree with the main line of argument in this article. Cases discussed are a useful historical illustration about historical events (African slave-trade, Munich 1938). Thus, ethical norms are important for history. The article is an excellent contribution for modern generations to assess the teaching of History at all educational levels. It is necessary to strengthen the ethical and moral requirements for research of the historical past, to reflect on the bias and distortions that are all too common today.