Dear Authors,

We agree with your stance on the emerging importance of CSR; however, we have certain concerns over your manuscript.

1. The need to conduct the study is not justifiable, only because the concept is gaining importance can not be the apt justification for conducting a bibliometric analysis. There exist several other bibliometric analysis on CSR, how is your study contributing to the existing literature reviews?
2. In the methodology section, you mentioned that you have used "CSR" as the keyword. Is it the only keyword you have used? If yes, I sincerely doubt the coverage and scope of your topic.
3. In the result section, it seems that you have just reported your findings based on the output from the software. The "Why" part is missing in the analysis section. For instance, a thorough and rigorous discussion can be provided on why there has been decline in CSR studies from 2009-2010? Moreover, in keyword analysis, a proper analytical comprehension could be made to make readers understand why only these keywords are prominent.
4. The most significant contribution of a review paper is future research directions. Unfortunately, the section on potential future research avenues is missing in the paper.
