The work is confusing and disconnected. I suggest restructuring it for publication.

As for me, I am unfamiliar with this term when talking about scientific articles, "mini review." This is belittling the article, considering the size of the research effort.

First, the article talks about a "mini review"; then, it talks about a case study. It's confusing. The writing and text are disconnected. The work does not present the structure of a scientific article. I suggest you restructure the article as:

Introduction, Materials and methods, Results "presents tables, etc.", Discussions, Conclusions, and References.
