Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article is an opening to architecture language. The researchers tried to reason why the research under study is important. However, the researchers were not able to do justice to the research topic to bring adequate literature into the study.

The researchers claim it is the whole of Kerala but just one ward of the Trivandrum corporation. The researchers need to rationalise how it became applicable to the whole of Kerala. It means research sampling and locality selection have to be rationalised.

The researchers attempted to bring theories relevant to the study, and it is appreciated, but they failed to connect the theories with the research subject, especially to connect facts and figures presented.

The grafts and maps are not clear

The methodology speaks of primary data collection and analysis, but the reader has not found the same. Maybe researchers need to reorient or redraft the research methodology.

The conclusion is good, but what are the recommendations the researchers want to suggest?
