

Review of: "The Effect of Group-Based Family Orientation to Community Mental Health Services"

Nermin Yücel

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This study contributes to the understanding of the impact of a group-based family orientation session in a community mental health service. The findings suggest that the IGS has the potential to shape service demand and create more clinical space. However, providing more details regarding the methods, effect sizes, and limitations would strengthen the study's scientific rigor. Additionally, expanding on the implications and practical applications of the findings would enhance the overall impact of the research.