Dear Nelly,

I found your work so interesting and highly believe that it attracts a lot of audience.

A great advantage of your work is your worldview, seeing some cognitive processes and metaphorization companion rather than hierarchical. I think, you need to refer to more recent studies to look at this phenomenon from different angles, such as suppression of semantic feature, homogeneity of concepts, metaphors and emotion, generic metaphors, and reasons behind using metaphor. I can recommend you some highly interesting novel studies done by my colleagues and I. I think you will be able to support your research discussing recent discussions. Here is a list of them:

Reasons behind Using Metaphor: A Cognitive Perspective on Metaphoric Language.

A cognitive perspective on basic generic metaphors and their specific-level realizations

Abstract metaphorical classes: A perspective from distributed models of conceptual representations

Types of metaphors and mechanisms of comprehension

Suppression in metaphor comprehension: A perspective from distributed models of conceptual representation

Suppression of semantic features in metaphor comprehension

Good luck!
