

Review of: "Promoting Pro-Environmental Behavior for Sustainable Water Resource Management: A Social Exchange Perspective"

Solomon Habtu¹

¹ Mekelle University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Generally, I found this paper interesting and contains ideas useful to global water resource management . It can also be published.

However, it requires amendment before publication. Because, the focus of the paper given to the country presumably taken as "a case study" is shallow and not addressed well. Iran, as a case study country, was introduced in the introduction section and expected to demonstrate the topic of the paper in experience sharing and learning to a wider global scale.

So, I suggest the author reorganize the paper and make in depth literature review and analysis on water management experiences (both in terms of strengths and weaknesses) in Iran and make recommendations on proper water resource management considering wider global level.