

Review of: "Post-Conflict Reconstruction: How Social Identity Change Informs our Understanding of the Ukrainian Experience of Forced Migration"

Silvia M. Chavez-Baray¹

¹ University of Texas at El Paso

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

An excellent article to understand the importance of the reception that the host country offers to the refugee, in terms of understanding the culture, academic revalidation, and job opportunities depending on the person's qualifications. The above contributes to the well-being of the refugee population and increases the productivity and economic income of the host country. It is important to include the gender issue from the introduction, since migrant women live different experiences than men, sometimes being left homeless.