The article is interesting, although the writing is not very good.

Style and language correction are recommended.

The title and objective of the review do not correspond to what is described in the text.

Much emphasis is placed on diabetes and its complications, although it is not the objective of the review.

The active ingredients of each species that could have antibacterial activity are not mentioned.

Some conclusions are different from what was reviewed and do not correspond to what was described.

Antibacterial activity is different from antifungal or antiviral activity, so it is suggested to modify the title or adjust the manuscript only for antibacterial activity.
