Dear Authors,

I recently reviewed your study titled "Molluscum Contagiosum: Case Report in A 10-Year Period (2008-2017)" and commend you on your diligent data collection efforts spanning a decade. However, I would like to offer some constructive feedback to enhance the impact and clarity of your research.

Firstly, while your study demonstrates thoroughness in data collection, it would greatly benefit from a clearer justification for its necessity. Given the prevalence of Molluscum Contagiosum and the abundance of existing literature on the topic, it is essential to explicitly articulate the specific research questions or gaps in knowledge that your study aims to address. Without this justification, the significance of your findings for publication may be called into question.

Additionally, I recommend incorporating a review of previous literature into your discussion section. Integrating existing research findings into your analysis not only enriches the discussion but also helps situate your study within the broader scientific context. By identifying areas of agreement, contradiction, or unexplored territory in the literature, you can better highlight the novelty and contributions of your research.

Furthermore, it is worth noting that the study would benefit from English language editing to improve readability and coherence.

Overall, your study presents a valuable contribution to the understanding of Molluscum Contagiosum. By addressing these suggestions, I believe you can further enhance the relevance and impact of your research.

Thank you for your attention to these points, and I look forward to seeing how you incorporate them into your work.
