Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

First of all, I would like to point out that this work, from the point of view of the review of theoretical frameworks on migration, is a meritorious contribution. It adopts an interesting interpretive scheme in which, starting from a solid theoretical base, it draws an interpretive scheme in which adversity, repulsion, or resilience operates to explain the tension, mobility, and immobility in conflictive contexts such as that experienced in the interior of Nigeria.

That said, I must point out an inconsistency that must be addressed from my point of view. The text intersperses testimonies that, as they are in the text, seem devoid of context. Of course, it includes in the main text references to the difficult situation in the Sahel area and, more specifically, in Nigeria, but as they are arranged (map included), it gives rise to a somewhat confusing result and hinders the theoretical exposition, otherwise quite solid.
