

Review of: "Agritourism: a source for socio-economic transformation in developing economies"

Dario Antonino Musolino¹

¹ Bocconi University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I appreciated this paper. Based on the existing literature, it provide an overview on agritourism in developing countries, particularly in some African countries. It is a quite fascinating topic. The considerable potential of this sector in these countries is well highlighted. I also liked the description of the five case studies at the country level.

I have only two comments to do. First, I suggest revising english language. Secondly, I wonder whether some figures about the development of agritourism in these five african countries are available. In particular I refer for example to data about number of firms, employees, turnover. If available, it would be interesting to know the actual weight of this sector in the economy of these five countries, and the latest trends.