The article presents an interesting topic to address in the implementation of the therapeutic approach. However, there are aspects that are insufficiently or not at all studied, such as: the egoism-empathy relationship, the impact of egoism in the therapeutic relationship (the relationship with the other elements – other emotions present, different types of work tasks in therapy, objectives, etc.), the traditional approach to the relationship between egoism, aggression and its manifestation in different therapeutic contexts. Also, the mathematical relationship is not processed enough – it more likely refers to relationships in physics, such as the relationship between pressure and volume, or between mass and volume, but does not reflect any of the known relationships (the definition of pressure or Boyle Mariotte's law, etc.). I recommend revising the article taking into account the scientific evidence of the concepts used as well as the relationships between them.
