

Review of: "Business projects need to be handled differently from construction projects"

Vyron Damasiotis¹

¹ University of Thessaly

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article addresses an intriguing subject that usually has a foundation. However, it primarily offers the author's personal views and beliefs. While this isn't inherently negative, it does raise concerns regarding the credibility of the arguments presented. There is a noticeable shortage of references, particularly in section 3. The abstract does not effectively summarize the article's content, leading readers to expect a comprehensive comparison between a construction project and a business project that the article does not provide. There is also a lack of methodological approach and a justification for the selection of case study projects and the discussed parameters. In summary, the piece is a reflection of the author's own convictions, rather than a scholarly work, drawing its validity solely from the author's own experience and knowledge. It better suits as a blog post.