

Review of: "When cat rescue fails — Part 1. Lion-clip shaving, enilconazole bathing and oral itraconazole treatment failed to control an iatrogenic Microsporum canis outbreak in a shelter: but a novel ophytrium-chlorhexidine shampoo and mousse treatment succeeded in the home"

Daniele Dallavecchia¹

¹ University of Porto

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I didn't add: Based on your experience, you could create a protocol to assist health workers dealing with outbreaks in shelters. In your article, this whole situation is described, but creating a protocol of action in these situations would be extremely important and very useful. Think about it!