

Peer Review

Review of: "A Congolese Mining Giant's Corporate Social Responsibility Stuck Between False Pretense and Bricolage: Going Beyond a Logic of Do No Harm to Materialize Sustainable Development Still at Issue"

W. Travis Selmier¹

1. Political Science, Indiana University at Bloomington, United States

Please look at the attached reviewer. As I note therein, "This paper has a good chance to be well-cited and to bridge gaps between ethnographic research from social anthropology to studies in business, in political economy, and in mineral resources/economics. But there are several areas where the paper would need to be strengthened before its potential can be realized." I look forward to reading the revision and congratulate Serge on excellent research with the potential for powerful impacts.

Attachments: available at <https://doi.org/10.32388/97Z4K5>

Declarations

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.