Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

- The introduction section could benefit from some restructuring and simplification for clarity and flow. Importantly, the research gap(s), objective(s), and question(s) should be clearly stated.
- In the introduction section, as well as other sections, incorporating in-text citations is strongly recommended, as they play a crucial role in providing proper attribution to the sources of information used in your work.
- The theoretical framework and research hypothesis section contains hypotheses, but the results section does not include the hypotheses' conclusions.
- In the methodology section, it is essential to provide a comprehensive explanation of your research strategy, particularly since your study is quantitative in nature. This will help readers understand the approach you have taken to gather, analyze, and interpret data. To expand the methodology, it is recommended to include: Research Strategy and Design, Sampling Method, Data Collection; Instrument Development; Data Analysis, and Ethical Considerations.
