

Review of: "Exploring factors explaining the scarcity of climate protests in East Asia"

Dimitri Costa¹

¹ Universidade do Porto

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Congratulations on this work. Proof for demonstrating the insufficiency of protests is not easy, so this study attempts to elucidate this issue and provide us with new insights into this complex framework, essential for humanity. Differences in the formation process of each nation (including a minimum of one country per continent, and each political regime), establishment time of current political status, historical contextualisation of the political regime evolution, and other social-historical-variables should be taken into account to further analyses. The authors should have previously checked data normality and homoscedasticity for determining the choice of Pearson correlation, for example.