

Review of: "Semblions of Words — The Language of Natural and Artificial Neural Networks"

Hiroshi Honda¹

¹ Keio University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This paper is a very interesting look at AI from a cognitive science perspective. The author mentions LLMs in the conclusion, but the following questions came to my mind. I would like to know the author's views.

- Can LLMs be considered as Semblions?
- Is it possible to make LLMs conscious by giving them emotions?
- What is the best approach to realize a MEM model from LLMs?