I am thankful to the author for coming up with this topic and working on it and presenting it this way. The topic is very relevant to the recent sociocultural trends associated with population dynamics. At the same time, it is necessary to research on the ways the rural areas and the people living there have a fair chance to quality life. The author has been successful to depict FWS as one of the different ways we can achieve this. However, I think the first few paragraphs of the article can be redundant. It is a good advocacy article for university and rural partnership entailing mutual benefits.
