As the author has stated, regional or urban-rural differences have a certain impact on genes and diseases, and this aspect of work is also worth paying close attention to. I also acknowledge that the author's work is very meaningful. At the same time, I have found some issues in this article and would like to offer some suggestions.

1 This retrospective study collected data up to 2014, lacking data from the past decade. Why is that? Is it because the data from the past decade was unavailable? Please explain.

2 I found that the SNPs common to Table 1 and Table 2 are not 14. Why is that? If it's my mistake, please mark the SNPs with the same names in both tables with the same color.
