

Review of: "Determinants of Women Entrepreneurs' Business Performance: Evidence from Micro and Small-Scale Enterprises in Arba Minch Town, Southern Ethiopia"

Parisa Sa

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I would like to commend the authors for undertaking a study that explores a valuable topic and contributes to the existing knowledge in this field. The effort put forth by the authors in conducting this research is evident. However, there are some constructive comments for the improvement of the manuscript:

- The manuscript would benefit from the inclusion of recent studies in the field to strengthen and support the presented work. It is essential to integrate current literature to provide a comprehensive and up-to-date understanding of the subject.
- To enhance the credibility and relevance of the study, it is advisable to incorporate new references that align with and support the arguments made in the paper. This can contribute to a more robust theoretical framework.
- The conclusions drawn from the study could be further strengthened with additional explanations. Providing more detailed insights into how the findings address research questions and objectives would enhance the overall impact of the study.
- The practical implications of the study, often referred to as the implications or applications section, are not clearly articulated. It is important to discuss how the study's findings can be applied in real-world scenarios or future research directions.
- The structure of the manuscript appears somewhat disorganized and resembles more of an essay than a scholarly article. Reorganizing the content to align with the standard structure of a scientific paper would improve clarity and readability.