This research is generally supportive of improving social acceptance and educational opportunities for transgender people in Pakistan. Such studies can educate the public to be kind towards transgender individuals in this highly conservative country. However, I suggest that future research include a larger number of participants and adopt better methodologies (for example, adopt standardised questionnaires for this type of survey rather than verbatim quotations) to produce more robust findings and to analyse the issues for better improved outcomes. The age groups added 12 years cannot specify the social and discriminations faced by the transgender persons. I suggest for older participants.
