The research idea is interesting and may lead to useful results.

The research has some important weaknesses for obtaining a truly useful result.

The authors try to justify the choice of the two databases and possibly the exclusion of others.

The authors must prove the results in a more conclusive way, to then generate conclusions. The source of the information in Table 1 is not clarified. If Table 1 is the result of the authors' analysis, it should be clarified how this information was arrived at.

Authors should clarify the limitations of their research.

Authors must correlate their conclusions with the research conducted in an indisputable way.
