

Review of: "Encounters with Others: Student Growth through Fieldwork Studies in Rural Areas"

Shaliet Rose Sebastian¹

¹ Kerala University of Health Sciences

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The article, "Encounters with Others: Student Growth through Fieldwork Studies in Rural Areas" addresses a very relevant topic the context of which varies according to the geographical location.

Abstract - good.

Introduction – The introduction has emphasized on the need and importance of Field work studies.

A good theoretical background has been established citing appropriate literature wherever applicable.

Objectives – the objective has been stated as how university students from urban areas engage in fieldwork studies and how they mature through such an experience. However, it has not been clearly specified as to what extent these objectives have been achieved.

Methodology – A structured presentation consisting of various sub headings like sample size calculation, study instrument, methodology, characteristics of the study population, results, conclusion, limitations and recommendation would enable a better understanding of the paper.

Results – The results would be better understood if a thematic analysis or most significant change approach would be used to analyse the data and present.

Limitations – The limitations need to be mentioned

Conclusion – The conclusion is missing

Recommendations – Write What do the authors recommend in the light of the present study..