Dear Alberto Bedogni.

I'd like to mention two key elements that support the researcher's scientific effort after describing the effort made by the researcher, which contains numerous factors that can affect the cumulative blood sugar level of the affected participants in the study. These two points are:

1. In order to evaluate research findings, we require a control group.
2. The procedure for gathering samples does not call for a period of fasting before to carrying out the cumulative blood sugar test because the outcome is unaffected. Otherwise, the researcher's efforts are noteworthy, and the work is regarded as a scientific creation that benefits a significant portion of society.

I want to sincerely thank you for your efforts.
