

Review of: "Integrating Mental Health Support in Emergency Planning and Disaster Risk Mitigation Strategies"

Aparna Kumari<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> University of Tampa

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Overall, the article is well written. The title of the article matches well with the content.

The article needs to add a methodology section. It is not clear what methodology is being used by the author to analyze the role of mental health support in emergency planning and disaster risk reduction.

The discussion section is confusing, and it is not clearly discussed how mental health support provided by government agencies and communities can facilitate the overall well-being of people in a crisis period.

The article needs to add more literature review on role of FEMA in mental health support during emergency response and recovery period.

The article needs to add a separate recommendation section.