This article is quite interesting and worth publication to influence decision on contraceptive use. It will further curb the spread of Sexually transmitted diseases and unwanted pregnancies. However, I have some comment that the authors should work on to add value to the work:

1. The introduction section should clearly quote the prevalence of contraceptive use in countries cited in the work and explicitly compared it to the status in Ghana. Further to this, within Ghana the survey would have revealed variation in contraceptive use which could be a very good basis for the study in Kumasi.
2. The data analysis section of the study should be explained explicitly for the readers and other researchers to note the analysis method
3. The income level was categorized in the socio-demographic section and in the multivariate regression some of the categorize are missing in the analysis
4. The authors will a great deal of service if they could provide the strengths and limitations of the study.

Finally, I thank them for the work undertaken and the replication of it into other sections with male gender will be interesting too.
