

Review of: "The Rural-Urban Divide: Insights from Immuno-Genetic Profiles and Implications for Health"

Dr. Vikash Mishra

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Attempt is commendable; however, there are several aspects in the manuscript that require further clarification to enhance its scientific credibility and appeal to readers. The abstract is excessively long, and the primary objective, as well as the material and methods section, lack clarity. The abstract should be concise and thus requires revision. The study's concept, scope, and objectives are not clearly articulated in the introduction section. Additionally, the author should explicitly mention the ethical approval number. The study design, along with the exclusion and inclusion criteria for participants, is not clearly defined and should be incorporated into the material and methods section. Technical procedures need to be presented with specificity and detail, which is currently lacking in the current version. Graphs are missing legends, and the conclusions need to be reframed, incorporating a summary of the main findings and their significance.