The manuscript has several grammatical errors.

Many keywords are incorrect. The authors should refer to MeSH database.

The authors did not highlight what is the gap in existing literature and the need to have such app especially when such apps are already in use.

Inclusion and exclusion criteria need to be elaborated.

Is there any stringent guideline to which these apps may adhere to?

Internet connection due to socioeconomic status, and app conflicting operating systems are the issues which should be addressed.

There are terms in local language which may not be understood by international readers.

Cultural variations may influence the results.

Clinically validated evidence is a matter of concern.

Facts related to long term use should have been discussed.

The currency of Indonesia should be converted to USD as it is difficult for any international reader to understand.

There are no latest references from 2020-2023. This implies that no work has been done in the similar field, which is incorrect.

The work does not have much novelty to justify its acceptance and it may be rejected.
