

Review of: "Choosing Education Abroad: A Parental Perspective in China"

Rebecca Stroud Stasel¹

¹ Queen's University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

The topic of this piece is both timely and pertinent to the expanding opportunities and promises of international education. The author (or authors, this is unclear) present a list of considerations for parents. The article reads as a newsletter item. The only references are posted as a list from 1-16 enumerating the papers that "he" (author unclear) has published, but no context.

This paper would benefit from some time clarifying the purpose, background, rationale, and intended audience. One of the keywords is critical factors but are rather factors without critical discussion. Another keyword is financial aid, but this is not developed either. This piece offers a good preliminary brainstorm for a potential study or opinion piece, but as is, does not offer any compelling propositions.