

Review of: "The Disruption of the COVID-19 Pandemic on Farm Produce and its Implications for the Future of Food Security - A review"

Daniel Tineo Flores

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Title:

It is interesting, but it does not have much relation with the content, it should specify the place of study.

Because if you are talking about a systematic review, this implies a more in-depth analysis. In addition, it should make clear whether the review is Global, or only focuses on Southeast Asia.

Introduction:

It is understood that at the beginning of the pandemic, there was little information about it. Currently, there is a large number of scientific publications (scientific articles), so it should include more references.

Methodology:

The study is not reproducible, it should consider the form of review, data analysis or others.

Results:

1. There should be a clearer order, there are paragraphs that present a void, have no reference, more like a personal opinion than a review. It should start by speaking globally, nationally and locally. It should also mention in a table which agricultural products have been affected by COVID-19, globally, nationally and locally, in terms of production and prices.
2. It should add the strategies to be considered in the future separately or dashes, for better understanding, and whether those strategies are feasible for all developing and developing countries.