

Review of: "Online learning during the COVID-19 pandemic, lessons learned and what's next?"

Anh Thi Van Pham

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

This paper attempted to review the state of online learning during the Covid-19 pandemic in several parts of the world. The strong points include the readability, a clear organization and a good review of what had happened in education in different countries globally. However, the topic is not so up-to-date since we are living in the post Covid-19 era. The proposed practices in this paper can be found in most of the papers concerning online learning amid Covid-19. The conclusion seems to be withdrawn during the pandemic so it is not valuable anymore as the pandemic has faded out not "is going to fade out".