

Review of: "Sola Scriptura to Improve the Quality of Christian Students in Thinking Characteristics"

Rosemary Sage<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I liked this topic as there is no doubt the decline in the Christian religion and code of practice is leading to a less thoughtful and decent society. Partly this is due to our pluralistic cultures and many religions operating that confuse people. If we are going to use the Sola Scriptura to produce improved thinking activity, the article needs a better background of knowledge about cognition. Sperry's work in the 1960s opened the debate about how learning and life now only develop our left linear, analytic brain and our prescriptive education, targeting tests and examinations, neglects the right lateral, free thinking one needed for intelligent behaviour. In fact, Jerre Levey pronounced our lack of understanding was due to this fact and can be seen in the limited decision-making that is prevalent today. If the argument is more closely related to how we are learning today and this is clarified it would give more meaning to the arguments.