This is a very interesting view of traditionally used plants for medicinal and commercial purposes while addressing the conservation needs of plant species. There are a number of issues to be highlighted regarding this article.

1. The "goal" did not quite express the title and the content of the article.
2. The goal of this research is to conserve these unique plant species endemic to Borneo and provide economic benefits to local communities. However, the article did not contain clear suggestions nor proposed actions to fulfill the goal.
3. I may not be clear on the final publication of this article, but why was the article referred to as "this chapter" in the introduction?

All the best!
