The American College of Rheumatology (ACR) is a professional organization representing rheumatologists and rheumatology health professionals in the United States. Its mission is to advance rheumatology through programs of education, research, advocacy, and practice support. The ACR provides guidelines for the diagnosis and treatment of rheumatic diseases, supports research into the causes and treatments of these diseases, and advocates for policies that improve access to care for patients with rheumatic diseases. The organization also offers continuing education programs, networking opportunities, and resources for rheumatology professionals.
