Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

Clarity of the Subject: While the first sentence introduces the main topic of landslides, it could be more explicit about the specific focus of the article. What aspect of landslides will be addressed in this paper? Is it about prevention methods, modeling, risk analysis, etc.? Adding a sentence that clarifies this could help better orient the reader.

Reader Engagement: The introduction could be made more engaging by adding concrete examples of the impact of landslides on communities or recent case studies. This will help captivate the reader's attention from the outset.

Organization and Flow: Ensure that the information flows smoothly from one point to the next. Consider grouping related ideas together to create a more coherent narrative.

Clarity of Concepts: Some sentences could benefit from clearer explanations or definitions of terms, especially for readers who may not be familiar with the subject matter.

Transition Sentences: Use transition sentences to connect ideas and guide the reader through the text. This will help maintain a logical flow and make it easier for readers to follow the argument.
