The subject is interesting, however, the results obtained pose difficulties from the operational level for companies that offer food, since, for example, food reimbursement is complex.

On the other hand, it would be necessary to increase the indicators to guide these companies (types of menus, groups with food problems (intolerances, allergies), access to specific foods).

The group to which the work has been directed is young, but it would also have been useful to see how COVID 19 has been able to affect other people with difficulties in eating (people with disabilities or the elderly with mobility problems).
