While this is an important topic, and an analysis of existing meta-analyses may reveal important insights, i.e., gaps in knowledge, need for specific areas of research, this 'review of reviews' is far too brief. Individual meta-analyses are often lengthy in terms of setting up inclusion and exclusion criteria and are often quite lengthy. If this is a 'review of reviews', much more content is needed to situate the framework of comparisons. The article is well written and cited well, and the topic is, as I mention, important. Simply put, the author(s) needs considerable elaboration for the paper to contribute significantly to our knowledge of this area.
