

Review of: "Generating Smart Goals of Engineering Education Institutes in the Fast-Developing Countries"

Humberto Javier Rodriguez Hernandez

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

I consider that the content fulfils the main purpose in document. In particular, I found the presentation of the various objectives of some of the most important universities in the world very relevant. In the same way, the engineering institutes have to develop goals that will guide them to prepare for capacity development, quality improvement and efficiency development. Defining institutional goal as help to conceptualize and articulate the future direction of the institutions and should be specific, measurable, achievable, relevant and time- bound. in the same way it was very important to mention some causes that influence failure.

It also seems to me that it provides a detailed vision of the aspects that the various technological institutes in emerging countries will have to address and proposes new lines of research in this regard.

Congratulations