

Review of: "Understanding the Patterns of Hate Incidents and Reporting Attitudes at a UK University"

Fernando José Sadio-Ramos¹

¹ Instituto Politécnico de Coimbra

Potential competing interests: No potential competing interests to declare.

A very good article, addressing an issue very relevant to understand and act in pedagogical and political terms, concerning the place of hate in universities. The research may contribute to promoting the quality of management, teaching/ learning and working methods on how to address the issue. Needless to say that the present growing antisemitic wave and the wokist trend are major factors to consider such issue.

The article is well based in theoretical terms. I'd also point out that it is well referenced.

Its research design is very competent methodologically, and its development is very proficient, supported by the theoretical frame. Excellent the idea of comparing groups, to enlarge the findings allowed by the participants.

The sample is large and shows a relevant work of environmental motivation of the respondents.

The authors show a competent use of the methodological techniques and instruments; the statistical competence should be also stressed.

The analysis is very proficient, sharp, and detailed, accompanied by the capable discussion.

Conclusions are very relevant.

The quality of the text must be referred, as well as the conscience of the limitations of the research. The future development of the research is possible, allowing to get more significant results, and contributing to the human rights' quality of society and education.

Congratulations to the authors and all the best for the article's future development.