The work of López-Iborra brings a unique picture on how the European passerines choose their stopover islands during the migration. I highly appreciate design of the study and the main questions that are insirative for other works. Especially, I appreciate including mutivariate analyses that brought a complex view on the behaviour of passerines during the migration. Therefore, in my opinion, this study should be followed by other specialists interested in mechanisms joint with bird migration in general. Jan Riegert
